Floating Landscapes (Interdimensional maps)

"When I speak of landscape, it is in a broad sense, which includes internal and external perceptions, not necessarily what is visible.

Artistic practice is a way of perceiving the world, the possibility of finding other meanings, a way of understanding and explaining reality to myself.

Since my beginnings, artistic activity has been a research process on various levels and with different techniques: Each technique gives me the opportunity to experience various conceptual, sensitive, poetic and formal issues. I work in series, because they are like sequences where I develop concepts that question and discover new perspectives to understand reality. I build each work in successive layers, with textures, shapes, colors, lines and gestures, which sometimes generate violent contrasts, sometimes subtle, adding and subtracting, to finally preserve the minimum elements to force and extend the limits of perception."
